“Throughout history, it has been proven that you cannot surrender the battlefield and still win the war. This war on terrorism was thrust upon us. America and other free nations were attacked by evil forces. To leave these forces unchecked would stoke the insatiable appetite of the beast.” (Staten Island Advance - 2/16/07)

But Vito Fossella, a Republican whose district includes Staten Island and part of Brooklyn, said the resolution would sound “a clarion call of retreat” and set the nation’s foes to wondering where the United States will retreat next. “You cannot surrender the battlefield and win the war,” said Mr. Fossella, who spoke immediately after Ms. Slaughter in the debate. (NYT - 2/17/07)
